- Abstract The development of a new product is a complex task that requires a high degree of coordination and communication among various stakeholders. This paper discusses the challenges of product development and presents a framework for managing the process. The framework includes a series of steps that guide the development team from the initial concept to the final product. The steps are: 1) Define the product, 2) Develop a business plan, 3) Create a prototype, 4) Test the prototype, 5) Launch the product, and 6) Monitor the product. The framework is designed to be flexible and adaptable to the needs of different organizations. The paper also discusses the importance of communication and collaboration in the product development process. The authors conclude that the framework provides a useful tool for managing the product development process and improving the chances of success.
