1. Explain why Tourism is an integrated discipline.

- Write at least three (3) related discipline to tourism.
- Give at least one (1) example of each related discipline.

Answer:

Tourism as an integrated discipline

The growth of interest in tourism among representatives from many academic disciplines, corresponding to particular aspects of tourism, has progressed together with the development of tourism as a multi-dimensional and complex phenomenon of psycho-logical, social, economic, spatial and cultural character. From an historical point of view, the first to study tourism were geographers and economists, and later sociologists. It seems that these are still in the lead. At the same time, they are being increasingly complemented by others, including anthropology, ecology, physical culture, psychology and others.

The idea of a chronological development in the academic study of tourism was presented by JAFARI (1992). He distinguished four phases in sequence but each does not supplant the others. In the last phase, named by the author 'Knowledge-Based Platform', stress is put on the need for systematic research on tourism.

In the Polish literature of the past two decades numerous books devoted to the methodological basis of tourism studies conducted within various disciplines of academic can be found. Among them are monographs edited by WINIARSKI (1999, 2003), WICZ (2009).

In order to prepare a basis for further discussion the author has made an attempt to define the range of interest in tourism shown by various academic disciplines.

To this end, he implemented the scheme proposed by LISZEWSKI (2010) according to whom the phenomenon of tourism, treated as a system of elements (sets) consists of: 1) tourists – the subject of the phenomenon; 2) the process of movement (tourism 'migration'); 3) destinations and transit locations (tourism space); 4) tourism activity (its forms and how to cultivate them); 5) effects and consequences of the migration and staying of the tourist at each
