Public support for NPIs is provided by the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development and national co financing This public support often reaches 100% of the total investment costs The Court concludes that NPI support has contributed to the achievement of objectives linked to the sustainable use of agricultural land but in a way that was not cost effective This was because the costs of 75% of the visited projects were unreasonably high Furthermore even though many of these projects had obvious remunerative characteristics they were fully funded with public money The Court makes five recommendations aimed at improving the cost effectiveness of NPIs that will be funded during the 2014 2020 programming period Page 4 of cover
