

INTRODUCTION

- Few studies have described the clinical course and outcome of specific cohorts of patients identified by their 911 call type.
- Chest pain patients are important due to the time sensitive nature of cardiac related treatment.

PURPOSE

- To describe the clinical course and outcome of patients identified as an MPDS Card 10 (chest pain), including the positive predictive value (PPV) with primary Emergency Department (ED) diagnosis.

SETTING

- An Accredited Center of Excellence by the National International Academies of Emergency Dispatch.
- Serving a population of 105,000, an annual call volume of 12,000, and dispatching 16 units over a 46,000 sq km area.

METHODS

- All 911 calls between November 1, 2011 and July 31, 2013 rated as a Card 10 pertaining to a patient  $\geq 16$  years of age were linked with their health outcomes.
- The deterministic linkage strategy matched on personal health number, gender, and transport destination with a 2-hour time frame between EMS arrival to triage.
- Descriptive analysis of the patient's clinical course and PPV of the MPDS Card 10 using primary ED diagnosis as the gold standard are provided.

RESULTS

LIMITATIONS

- Retrospective data.
- No data on non-Card 10 patients.

CONCLUSIONS

- Almost half of Card 10 patients do not have a primary ED diagnosis related to a cardiac condition.
- One third of patients are admitted to hospital.
- Overall Mortality (9 out of 570 patients) is less than 2%.
- These results are an important starting point to improve the detection of cardiac patients at the time of the 911 call.
