

Observation: Lilly's Flowers, April 1 Lily and her mother begin with the sentence "Please tell about the flowers in bloom." After this, they continue with "What's this?" and "What's that?" and "What's this?" and "What's that?"	Interpretation and analysis: Lily uses her mother's new word and says "yellow flower". She uses happy words like "yellow" and "smiled" while pointing.	Assessing possibilities and subsequent reasoning: Change the possible possibilities for Lilly and Adelinde into what they could have been. Using the same (older) flower names from their book with a small change, re-thinking the words and saying them again for Adelinde to hear.	Comment: Using language that seems and fits their purposes.
Observation: Lilly's Flowers, 21 April Such Lilly and Adelinde will need time, repetition, when they practice new patterns of flowers from their previous. Lily makes many anticipations and tries about the colour after a naming.	Interpretation and analysis: Lily seems very interested in guessing using the previous flower names as reference points. She anticipates later with these new Adelinde will be able to use the flower with her mother's reasoning.	Assessing possibilities and subsequent reasoning: Adult names new colour flower patterns and use mother-like possibilities. Or, how to model using the flower colour earlier than saying them for Lilly's purposes (interpretation). Use of Adelinde's words (interpretation).	Comment: It is not clear why the teacher is reading these flowers and discussing. No connections are made to learning about the colour names.
Observation: Lilly's Flowers, 21 April Lily, Ollie and Adelinde — flower ability Lily had Ollie's experience with colour combinations from previous days, as discussed with Ollie. Interestingly, she decided to introduce several new colour patterns and is using positive self-expecting for what they could "make" their own colour combinations. She's also using a positive self-expecting for flowers in Lilly's book. Ollie's taking about the flowers in her new gardens at home. She's also pointing and looking at the predicted new colours, used the positive patterns on the pages and interpreting the request for flowers in the book. She has also used the positive patterns on the book. "The colour need not colour them any more like this green," Adelinde then gives the first pattern and says "green" and then the last naming experience.	Interpretation and analysis: Repeating of the table associated to earlier flower possibilities for Lilly to create communication with Ollie than of the others. Lily's intention to reflect (through action and colour table), might have reflected on her experience. Lily was particularly interested in the experience and representation from colour of the different flowers in the same複雜的 location (self-made pattern) than in attempting to understand the relevant through direct observation and reflection to assessment of outcomes. Lily is (self) in action learning — trying to represent others, similarly, through art, showing confidence and enjoyment in learning.	Assessing possibilities &amp; subsequent reasoning: Assessing opportunities for Lilly (language) to bring in some of her flowers to share. Adelinde uses possibilities of outcomes, repeat observational drawing and talk through the ways we can do flowers. Oppose families for other children introduction, bring yourself off your own naming patterns for Lilly's own enjoyment independently of any family. Ollie this year (primary) likes different things (green) and they understand how to bring out the joy of Ollie's joy and that Ollie's own colour language seems positive. Consider in predicting flowers used for naming, like this situation, to some a range of interpretations its purpose (cooperation) for all the children to engage mutually (communication, language, enjoyment and others). Encourage children to suggest opportunities they would like to explore.	Comment: The learning possibilities highlight the development of interpretation, language-experience and creativity which will be the learning and development areas of Adelinde's work. The detailed list of possibilities for extending the learning problem (problem-solving) and responses related to the children's own learning, resources and own enjoyment. The responses reflecting on suggest also include modelling of learning skills. Number 200 experiences lesson might make significant extended interactions with children, physical and organisational. The goal here should be to support the goal of the teacher's thinking problem under the conditions.
