ABSTRACT

Various factors influence students to be active in learning English. One of them is role-playing and drama in learning songs. The present study aims to showcase EFL students' emotions in learning English as a foreign language by adopting musical colossal drama project-based learning. Nested in a qualitative case study, the eleventh-grade students of a senior secondary school in Purbalingga, Central Java, Indonesia were recruited to participate. Data were garnered through semi-structured interviews and classroom observation. The data were analyzed by employing data reduction, data display, and conclusion verification. Findings of the study demonstrate that the senior high school EFL students showed positive emotions when they engaged in learning English, particularly adopting songs, in the frame of musical colossal drama project-based learning. Another finding reveals that musical colossal drama project-based learning boosted the EFL students' 21st century skills, i.e., critical thinking, creative thinking, communicating, and collaborating. This study promotes some empirical evidence for how musical colossal drama is organized to foster students' involvement in a project-based English language learning.

Introduction

Making students engage and their activeness in learning English is challenging for the English teachers. The teachers should be creative and find different ways of teaching English, especially in blended learning (Luan et al., 2020). During the pandemic era, there were lots of challenges that English teachers faced dealing with making the students more active in learning processes, especially in learning English (Aulia, 2022). The students tend to be quiet in the learning process. They seldom collaborate with their friends and enjoy their learning based on the virtual meeting held in online learning. The blended learning implementation is
