9. Construction.

- (a) Slit trenches are a quick improvised shelter and consist of a trench 3 ft. to 4 ft. deep and 2 ft. to 3 ft. wide.
- (b) Soil excavated is used to form a parapet on either side.
- (c) If the length of the trench exceeds 12 ft., traverses should be made to localise effect of a burst.
- (d) When possible the trench should be constructed under cover.

TO GIVE QUICK IMPROVISED SHELTER

UNSTRUTTED

FIG. 4

E. Concealment.

10. All defence works must, so far as possible, be concealed either by natural or artificial means, against both air and land observation. Remember this in siting them.

Natural means are the best, and the aim should be to blend the work into the surrounding landscape. Excavated earth should not be smoothed down. The parapets of weapon pits can be covered with sods cut from under bushes or trees. Foliage can also be used to break straight lines (but dead foliage is unnatural and must be removed). Breastworks are difficult to conceal, but can be sited on the line of a hedge or on the fringe of a wood.

If time permits shallow dummy positions with parapets, etc., should be constructed so as to mislead the enemy, and tracks made up to them. Conversely, great care should be taken not to give away real positions by tracks leading up to them.
