Iridescence Finding Your Colours And Living Your Story:

Iridescence Professor of Physics and Biophysics Paul Callaghan, Paul Gordon, 2014-12-10 At 34 years of age Paul Callaghan had it all Especially for an Aboriginal person Being born an Aboriginal person in Australia means that statistically you are going to die younger have poorer health earn less be more likely to be unemployed and be more likely to end up in jail At 34 years of age none of these things were on the horizon for Paul He had three qualifications in the areas of surveying drafting and business He was employed by a large university in the area of promotions and marketing whilst also having a part time role as a lecturer in economics to Aboriginal students But on his 35th birthday Paul's life came crashing down He had spent 35 years chasing the dream Proving to himself and the world that he didn't have to let statistics and probability of failure dictate his life But he was so busy chasing success that he had not seen the dark shadow of depression watching him with patience and desire As his career sparkled and shone the black dog waited for its time to introduce itself brazenly and without apology Paul then started a quest and attacked it with the same fervour as he had with all other things in his life He had to fix this unforeseen hiccup in his great life plan He wanted an instant cure But as time passed Paul realised the cure was not an instant one It was about exploration and undertaking a journey to finding his own colours And an important part of Paul's journey has been the learning passed onto him by a man named Paul Gordon Uncle Paul has been given knowledge from many Old Ones over the years This knowledge has been passed down over thousands of years and it has changed Paul Callaghan's life This book provides insights on wellbeing and fulfilment based on his journey It includes the lessons he learned from many sources over the years including from Uncle Paul a very giving and humble man who reminds us that his views aren't necessarily the views of other Aboriginal people Across Australia there is a rich tapestry of Aboriginal stories and divergent views that we can all regardless of race and colour learn much from Paul Callaghan says I have learned to see the magic that is in every day I am no longer lost I am found I am living my truth Are you living your truth your story If not then iridescence provides you with models tools insights exercises reflections and 30 specific messages around key themes including your life's journey the importance of the past love learning sharing leadership laughter loss personal power anxiety anger regret guilt responsibility success wellbeing and truth to help you find your colours so that you can start living your story today
