Neshaminy School District

From the Desk of Dr. Greta Heble

The No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 reauthorized the Elementary and Secondary Education Act enacted in 1965 and instituted the Pennsylvania System of School Assessment (PSSA) as an external accountability measure. Its purpose is to ensure that all students, in every district in the state, are being instructed in the eligible content identified in Pennsylvania Academic Core Content Standards. The percentage of students who need to demonstrate proficiency on the PSSA has increased steadily since the tests were first administered over a decade ago. This year the targets for the number of students who must be proficient are 78% for math and 81% for reading. Writing and science are not used to calculate Adequate Yearly Progress.

Success in the world beyond school is determined not only by proficiency on the PSSA but by many learning experiences that help students to meet future college and career challenges. Although it is one data point in student achievement, public opinion of a school district is based on PSSA results. Therefore, it is necessary for students to take the tests seriously and truly demonstrate their knowledge. Proficiency on the grade 11 PSSA is a graduation requirement according to the Pennsylvania School Code (Chapter 4).

Douglas Reeves, a leading educator and researcher, says that the fundamental purpose of assessment is to improve student achievement and teaching practice. Assessments have the power to be transformative when teachers use them as an integral part of the instructional cycle and then examine the test data to adjust their instruction to meet student needs. Standardized tests, such as the (PSSA) for grades 3-8 and grade 11 in reading, writing, mathematics and science, are not easily embedded in the instructional sequence because they are administered by an external entity, the Pennsylvania Department of Education. However, since the curricula in grades K-12 in all subjects, including reading, math and science, are aligned to the state standards, preparation for the PSSA is intentionally integrated into lessons throughout the year.

To perform at advanced and proficient levels, students need to learn test-taking strategies in addition to mastering content and skills. They also need to build stamina for sustained effort to apply their knowledge. To that end, the District has supported classroom instruction with resources for teachers and opportunities for every student to be successful.
