HOW TO RELOAD A CARTRIDGE

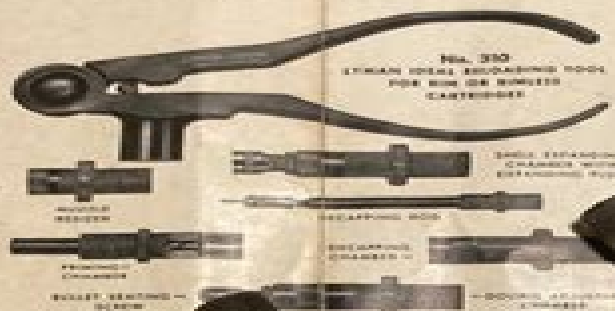

The No. 310 Tool consists of a pair of Handles, a Decapping Chamber, Decapping Rod, Priming Chamber, Double Adjustable Chamber with Bullet Seating Screw, Muzzle Resizer and Shell Expanding Chamber with Expanding Plug.

To decap, screw the decapping chamber into the threaded portion of the tool handles and screw the decapping rod in until the decapping pin protrudes slightly above the opening in the handle. The case may now be put muzzle down into the decapping chamber, making sure that the decapping pin enters the flash hole in the cartridge. Closing the handles will expell the primer.

After expelling the fired primer, the primer pocket should be examined for breakage. The presence of excess fouling in the cases will make the pockets should be discarded. If fouling is brittle and can be satisfactorily removed, the primer point of the decapping pin around the primer pockets.

Cast bullets come from the foundry in a standard size. They are resized to the correct diameter and trued up by the Muzzle Resizer. The Resizer and Sizer or the Double Adjustable Chamber which can be used in the tool. They should first be lubricated, as described in the Ideal Handbook, unless the No. 45 Lubricator is used. After lubricating the bullets are resized at a time, base first, through the Bullet Sizing Chamber which will force the lubricant into the grooves and leave them clean. Wipe the bases off and the bullets are ready for use.

Primers, screw the priming chamber into the handles until the priming punch protrudes from the flat surface of the shell holder when the tool handles are pressed all the way together.

Then place a shell in the shell holder part of the priming chamber, place a primer in the opening, close the tool handles and the primer will be inserted. It should be seated clear to the bottom of the pocket, but should not be unduly compressed. The depth of the priming should be regulated by the priming punch or cut off, if it may be put

We also have a primer holder which will hold the primer in place while the shell is being primed.

The neck resized with the Muzzle Resizer. The neck is resized from the inside with the Muzzle Resizer to the correct diameter.

In the double adjustable chamber, back the chamber until a loaded cartridge can be placed in it without coming in contact with any part of the chamber. Turn the chamber in until the crimping screw is fully against the mouth of the loaded cartridge. Put it in this position with the check nut. Then turn the bullet seating screw so that it is in firm contact with the point of the bullet and check the position and lock in position.

Insert a bullet in the mouth of the cartridge case previously charged with powder and enter the cartridge in the double adjustable chamber. Close the handles fully and the bullet should be seated to the proper depth and the cartridge case crimped at the correct point. If examination shows that the position of the bullet and the crimp are not correct, the chamber and the bullet seating screw can be adjusted slightly to correct this.
