ABSTRACT

Background: Histological characteristics of endometrial biopsy material as assessed by light microscopy remain the diagnostic standard for the clinical diagnosis of endometrial pathology. Management of abnormal uterine bleeding is not complete without tissue diagnosis. The aim of the study was to find out the histopathological pattern of the endometrium in abnormal uterine bleeding.

Materials and Methods: Endometrial biopsy specimens received from Jan 2007 to Nov 2010 were studied retrospectively in the Department of Histopathology, Helping Hands Community Hospital, Kathmandu. The specimens were routinely processed and the hematoxylin and eosin stained slides were studied.

Results: A total of 300 specimens were analyzed. In the group of patients less than 40 years of age, 73 (50%) were normal, 34 (23%) had abnormal physiologic changes and 13 (9%) had pregnancy related complications and benign changes. In the age group between 40 – 55 years, abnormal physiological changes, benign conditions and normal physiological changes were 45 (32%), 41 (29%) and 37 (26%) respectively. In the age group > 55 years, there were 3 (21%) malignant and 3 (21%) benign conditions. There were 5 (36%) unsatisfactory samples in this age group.

Conclusion: It is important to know the histological pattern of the endometrium in abnormal uterine bleeding in different age groups since it will help in the management of the cases. In this study endometrial hyperplasias were seen in 55 cases (18.8%). The importance of studying the histological pattern of endometrium in abnormal uterine bleeding in different age group is to help in correctly managing the cases.

INTRODUCTION

Histological characteristics of endometrial biopsy material as assessed by light microscopy remain the diagnostic standard for the clinical diagnosis of endometrial pathology. Indeed, the initial diagnosis is made by endometrial biopsy or by curettage, which in itself may be therapeutic. Conversely, the biopsy or curettage may not sample the entire endometrium, and the areas of greatest histological or cytological severity may thus escape histological identification. Management of abnormal uterine bleeding (AUB) is not complete without tissue diagnosis especially in perimenopause and post menopause. AUB may be the symptom of endometrial carcinoma in 8 – 50% of cases.¹ The aim of this study was to find the histopathological pattern of endometrium in abnormal uterine bleeding in all age group.
